About Dr. Kelly

Carol Kelly, PhD is not your average business consultant. She was a successful executive working in corporate finance for 12 years before she earned her PhD in clinical psychology. For the next 20 years, while she practiced as a clinical psychologist, she consulted with clients who needed help strengthening and developing their organizations. Today, as The Business Psychologist, Dr. Kelly draws on her unique combination of corporate experience and psychological expertise to help her clients unleash their full professional potential.

Regardless of their innate talents, at some point both individuals and companies will arrive at the point where they need to address their weaknesses to reach the next level of success. That's where Dr. Kelly comes in - guiding her clients toward their goals with hands-on, shirt-sleeves-rolled-up, productive methods that get results.

This is not wishy-washy self-improvement or feel-good-for-a-minute team building exercises that are forgotten the next day. Professionals are accountable for profitable results and Dr. Kelly helps them deliver by making permanent changes in their own attitudes and behaviors that lead to success for themselves and for their businesses.

"When I was promoted above others on my team, I immediately had a problem. My old buddies saw me as a friend instead of a boss and refused to work as a team. Soon, everyone in the my group was at odds with each other and I was in danger of being fired. Carol's ability to help people examine their own behavior and apply the understanding they gain to their professional efforts turned things around. I learned to lead as an executive and our team learned to overcome and appreciate their differences so we could could get on to the actual work. Because of Carol, the company was spared an expensive executive search and replacement because she literally saved my job."
